How to sync calendar on android phone. Mobileiron calendar not syncing iphone. How to sync my outlook calendar to my android phone.

One of the things I love about Google Calendar is that it requires no desktop component. Sure, you can sync it with Outlook, but not everyone needs or wants a program like that just to manage appointments. Indeed, more and more people prefer to keep their calendars on their mobile phones, just as they do their address books. If you do use Outlook, you've probably already configured it to sync with your phone. If not, or if, like me, you're trying to migrate away from that unwieldy beast, look no further than Google Sync—a free service that syncs mobile phones with Google Calendar. And not just Google Calendar, but also Google Contacts and Gmail. The service works with BlackBerry, iPhone, and Nokia S60 devices. (Why not Android? Because Google's mobile OS already syncs with the various Google services, natch. As for the Palm Pre and Pixi, they can sync with Google right out of the box.) Google provides all the instructions you need for configuring and using Google Sync, so I won't rehash them here. My goal is simply to explain why it's a good idea. If you're already a Google Calendar user, it should be pretty obvious: Sync brings a copy of your schedule to your phone—and keeps both versions up to date. Handy! If you're not a Google Calendar user, Sync effectively gives you an online backup of your schedule—something that could prove invaluable if your phone gets broken, lost, stolen, etc. Plus, there's much to be said for having a calendar that's accessible from any Web-enabled device (desktop, netbook, iPad, etc.). Same goes for your contacts: To add Yahoo, go to Settings > Passwords & Accounts > Add Account > Yahoo, enter Yahoo address, and tap Next > Password > Sign in. To set sync frequency, go to Settings > Passwords & Accounts > Fetch New Data > Yahoo > Fetch and select the frequency. To remove an account, go to Settings > Passwords & Accounts > Yahoo > Delete Account > Delete from My iPhone. This article explains how to sync a Yahoo Calendar with an iPhone calendar. Instructions apply to iPhones with iOS 12, iOS 11, or iOS 10. Yahoo Calendar is available on the iPhone as part of a linked Yahoo Mail account. With Yahoo Calendar activated, events appear in your iPhone calendar automatically. Setting up Yahoo Calendar and the iPhone Calendar to synchronize in the background is easy. Any changes to the Calendar updates on both the iPhone and your Yahoo account. If you have not yet added the Yahoo as an email account to iPhone Mail: Open iPhone Settings and tap Passwords & Accounts. Tap Add Account in the Accounts section. Choose Yahoo from the list of preconfigured providers. Type your full Yahoo Mail address where it says Enter Your Email and tap Next. Enter your Yahoo Mail password under Password and tap Sign in. Move the slider next to Calendars to the On/Off position. Also move the sliders for Mail, Reminders, Contacts, and Notes. Tap Save. If you added Yahoo to your Mail account previously, you might not have turned on the Calendar feature. To check this, go to Settings > Passwords & Accounts > Yahoo and confirm the slider next to Calendars is set to On/Off. If not, turn it on. To set up the frequency your iPhone checks for Yahoo mail and calendar additions: Return to Settings > Passwords & Accounts. Tap Fetch New Data at the bottom of the screen. Tap the Yahoo account entry. Check Fetch. Select Fetch New Data at the top of the screen to return to the previous screen. Scroll to the bottom of the screen and tap the frequency you want for the iPhone to sync with non-iCloud Mail accounts. If you find that your account isn't syncing properly, you should delete and then re-add your Yahoo account. To remove a synced Yahoo Calendar account from your iPhone: Tap Settings on the iPhone Home screen. Select Passwords & Accounts. Tap your Yahoo account. Tap Delete Account and confirm the deletion by tapping Delete from My iPhone in the pop-up window. Thanks for letting us know! Get the Latest Tech News Delivered Every Day Subscribe Tell us why! We love platform convergence, because it allows us to sync our devices in newer and more useful ways. Take the growing compatibility between mobile Android devices and Windows 10. Where once the two were barely on speaking terms, you can now make Android notifications and alerts sync. In practical terms, this means that you can keep track of everything happening on your smartphone while you work on Windows 10 — without glancing down at your phone screen every time. The key is Cortana, the digital assistant on Windows 10 and Xbox One; her capabilities include syncing between devices, and we'll run you through exactly how to do so. Step 1: Download Cortana for Android While there are third party apps available that allow some Android-to-Windows communication, the easiest option is to let Cortana's official app do that work. To do that, you need Cortana on your Android phone, so head over to the Google Play store on your phone and download the Cortana app. It's free, and compatible with most modern Android mobile devices. However, if you are using your Android phone in a BYOD scenario, make sure that your company is okay with you downloading a voice assistant and linking accounts this way. Step 2: Sign in Once Cortana is installed, you should transition over to a welcome screen. If not, try restarting the Cortana app to kick it into motion. You will see a friendly, "Hi!" from Cortana, and then she will ask you to sign into your Microsoft Account. You will need your own Microsoft Account and password for this step. If you aren't sure if you have a Microsoft account or not, remember that it will be the same sign-in you used for past Windows/Xbox services. If you haven't started using Windows 10 yet and don't have a history with Microsoft, creating a login is very easy. After you sign in, you will see an option to allow Cortana to actively listen for her "Hey Cortana" activation line in case you want to give commands to your Android device. This depends on your current use of voice assistants. Most Android devices have an "Ok Google" command option these days, and if you are already used to that, then there isn't much of a reason to adopt a new voice assistant. But if you prefer Cortana to Google's voice assistant — and there are reasons to do so — then check away and move onto the next step. Step 3: Sync basic notifications Cortana will now begin to access information on your Android device, getting up to speed on your data. Yes, this does mean that Microsoft will have access to your Android data. You can read more about what Cortana does with your data there, and what sort of privacy you can expect. When this is finished, go to the top left of your screen and select the three-lined button there. Here, look for an option that says, "Sync notifications." Choose it, and that will take you to a another settings menu that will show you the basic notifications you can enable. Any of these Android notifications that are enabled will also show up on Windows 10 in your little Cortana alert box. The basic phone stuff is all here — low battery warnings, text alerts, missed calls, and so on, so pick which alerts you want to receive. Step 4: Choose specific syncing for app alerts If you continue down the Sync notifications list, you will notice an option for App Notifications Sync (or possibly Choose what apps to sync, depending on your setup). Choose this and you can sync the notifications for any compatible Android app from a list. Chances are good that you have a lot of these apps, so take some time to go through them all and make sure only the important apps are selected. You probably don't want any random browser notifications or additional calendar alerts, but if there are apps you'd like Android notifications from, swipe right to activate them and you will receive those alerts too. Step 5: Hop over to Windows and restart Head to your Windows 10 computer and restart it: It's not always necessary, but it's a good idea to ensure smooth syncing. After you login again, make sure that Cortana is showing notifications from your Android phone. After that, you are all set! Note that you may be able to increase compatibility with features like the Microsoft Phone Companion. Reminder: If it isn't working, check your Windows 10 Cortana settings to make sure that Cortana can access information from other devices. Editors' Recommendations Click to view As of yesterday's announcement of CalDAV support in Google Calendar, you can now sync your Google Calendar with virtually any popular desktop calendar for free. Not only can you enjoy your favorite desktop calendar software and still get the benefit of the web interface, but you can also sync any desktop calendar with any other across platforms using GCal as a go-between. Let's take a comprehensive look at how to set up bidirectional syncing between Google Calendar and your favorite desktop calendar—from Outlook and iCal to Sunbird and Thunderbird—for free. Google Calendar has added support for the CalDAV standard, opening up a realm of syncing...Read more Remember, this doesn't mean that you can sync Google Calendar with just one desktop calendar. It means that no matter what you're using—Outlook at work and iCal at home, for example—you can always stick to desktop calendars if that's what you prefer. Google Calendar now works as both a great web application and a dedicated syncing tool. It's the cloud, and once it's set up, you don't ever have to access your calendar through the web again if you don't feel like it. But when you're not at a desktop, you can fire up GCal from any web browser, make changes, and still be confident your desktop is completely in sync next time you fire it up. Let's get started. Sync Microsoft Outlook with Google Calendar Syncing calendar events between Outlook and Google Calendar has been a cinch ever since Google came out with Google Calendar Sync, a free application that provides bidirectional syncing between the two. (It also supports one-way sync in either direction, if for some reason you don't want two-way syncing.) Assuming you're using a supported setup (Outlook 2003 or 2007 and either Vista or XP), here's how to get it working. Select your sync method (most likely you want two-way syncing) and the sync frequency you prefer. It defaults to syncing every 120 minutes, which seems a little long for most. Hit Save and you're done. Easy, right? If you've added a new item to your calendar and you want to force a new sync rather than waiting for Google Calendar Sync to run its next sync, just right-click the system tray app and choose Sync. It doesn't get much simpler than that. Sync iCal with Google Calendar UPDATE: Since this post was written, Google released a new utility called Calabration that handles iCal-to-Gcal sync setup with even more ease. (Original post) Mac OS X only: Google announced CalDAV support in Google Calendar this summer, which meant that...Read more As of yesterday, Google Calendar supports two-way synchronization with iCal through the CalDAV remote calendar standard. Setting up iCal with GCal varies slightly based on whether or not you're using your default GCal calendar or a secondary calendar. First, here's how to set up your Google Calendar default with iCal: Open iCal, then fire up your iCal Preferences (iCal -> Preferences or Cmd-.) Click on the Accounts tab, and then click the '+' button to add a new remote calendar to iCal. Call the calendar whatever you want (I went with 'Personal' for my main calendar), then enter the Google account username (which is normally your Gmail address) and password. Click on Server options to display the Account URL text box. For your default calendar, enter the following URL: gmail.com/user...replacing youremail@gmail.com with your actual email address. Once you've done that, just hit Add and you're finished. Give iCal a few minutes to download all your events and you're good to go. If you want to add a secondary calendar, the steps are exactly the same as above with one small difference. Instead of inserting your email address in the Account URL as described in step 4, you need to grab the calendar ID for that specific calendar. You can find it by opening GCal, clicking the arrow next to the calendar you want to sync, and selecting Calendar settings. In the settings, find the Calendar Address section near the bottom of the window, then just copy and paste the Calendar ID (which is formatted like an email address) in place of youremail@gmail.com in the URL above. You can refresh iCal to make sure you've synced the latest-and-greatest at any time by selecting Calendar -> Refresh or hitting Cmd-R. (Original post) Sync Mozilla Sunbird or Thunderbird with Google Calendar Whether you're using Mozilla's standalone calendar application Sunbird or Thunderbird with the Lightning extension installed (Lightning integrates Sunbird into Thunderbird), bidirectional calendar syncing between either application and Google Calendar is a breeze. The special sauce in this sync is the Provider for Google Calendar extension. Installing Provider in either Sunbird or Thunderbird is basically the same procedure, and here's how it works: Download and install the Provider extension by saving it to your desktop, opening the Add-ons dialog in either Sunbird or Thunderbird, and dragging the file you just downloaded into the Add-ons dialog. Once installed, make sure to restart the application. Now that Provider is installed, you have to add your new Google Calendar. In Sunbird, go to File -> New Calendar; in Thunderbird, it's File -> New -> Calendar when you're in the calendar view. You're now looking at the Create new calendar wizard. Select "On the Network" and hit Continue. Choose Google Calendar as the calendar type. The Location field requires the XML flavor of your calendar's Private Address, which you can get by opening GCal and choosing Calendar settings from the drop-down next to the calendar you want to access. At the bottom of the settings page you'll see the Private Address section. Copy the XML link and paste it into the Location field in Sunbird or T-bird. When you hit Continue, you'll be asked for your Google Calendar username (again, your Gmail address) and password. Enter it, and hit Continue. You're done. From now on, any event you add to that calendar will automatically sync to GCal and vice versa. You can reload the calendar to get the most up-to-date information at any time by clicking the Reload button in your toolbar. (The button is installed in the toolbar by default in Thunderbird, but you may have to customize your Sunbird calendar to add it to the toolbar.) Sync Your Mobile Device with Google Calendar If you're interested in syncing your mobile device with Google Calendar, you've also got a ton of great and free options. BlackBerry users can check out Google Sync, a BlackBerry app made by Google specifically for Gcal-to-BlackBerry syncing. Alternatively, the free, open-source application GCalSync does bidirectional syncing between Gcal and tons of supported phones. (Original post) Freeware program GcalSync offers two-way synchronization between Gcal and your mobile device's...Read more If you're an iPhone or iPod touch user, you can set up automatic, two-way syncing between your Google Calendar (and Gmail contacts) with web site NuevaSync. (Original post) We've shown you how to set up free push email, contacts, and calendars on your iPhone, but for...Read more Finally, if your phone supports SyncML, web application GooSync can handle Gcal syncing without installing anything. Other Options If you're not happy with the methods detailed above—which I selected because each represents the easiest and cheapest (read: free) option—there are still tons of other tools to sync Google Calendar with your desktop calendar. First, we've covered how to sync Google Calendar and Gmail contacts with the more technical GCALDaemon. Also, the cross-platform Calgoo just went free, with both Outlook and iCal syncing capabilities. On a somewhat unrelated but still useful note, you can also now sync Google contacts with your Mac OS X Address Book. Mac OS X Leopard only: Today's release of Mac OS 10.5.3 added a juicy little tidbit to Address...Read more How do you like to get your GCal on your desktop? Let us know in the comments.
